The text:

1-The concern over immigration is fuelled in part by two conflicting fears. Illegal immigrants are vulnerable to exploitation by employers and often victimized-kidnapped, tortured and sometimes killed by criminals and smugglers. At the other extreme , in cities like Los Angeles, they flood labor market and set off bitter competition with American workers and legal immigrants for jobs.

2-Much as Americans tend to regard immigrants as poor, uneducated and less skilled, the vast majority are surely enterprising. What they seek is opportunity. The opportunity to hold jobs that no American wants, to buy a T.V. set and a car, to start a new family and invest in the next generation. Integration is for the young. It takes money and determination to pull up the roots, say good-bye to all that is dear and familiar. Illegal immigration with all its hazards is for the truly daring.

3-The law to stop immigration created in 1965 recognizes three reasons to award visas: job skills, a demonstrable reason to seek refuge from war or political persecution and kinship to an American citizen or a legal alien. This triad of goals replaced the national origin system of 1924 which favored immigration anywhere else.

4-And the law is full of holes. Some immigrants game the system by forging documents and paying American lawyers to make them eligible American visas and green cards. This is known as adjusting status and in most years it works for more than 200,000 immigrants.
