Space tourism actually began in 2001, though in a very restricted and _____ form. The first _____ to go to space was American businessman Dennis Tito, who paid $20 million for his flight to ISS on a Russian Soyuz spacecraft, followed by six other adventurous and rich _____ visiting between 2002 and 2009. Russia has put a hold on tourist flights and has not _____ them yet; _____ to be fair, shelling out $20-40 million for a life experience cannot be called tourism yet. Stargazing, however, is a popular space tourism pastime for many. There are many parts of the world that are renowned for their stargazing potential. These are usually _____ areas, where the light pollution is reduced, _____ maximum visibility. Some popular stargazing destinations have capitalized on the tourist market by organizing stargazing tours or stargazing-focused _____ options, such as bubble hotels. Unlike tents and cabins, these transparent bubbles offer unobstructed views of the night sky and surrounding landscapes.

This makes sense (geography) _____, considering the Maldives is home to at least 1,192 uninhabited and 200 inhabited islands. Whether you tour multiple islands by staying at (many) _____ than one resort over the course of your vacation, or you charter a boat, or take a day tour to an adjacent atoll, make sure to island-hop while (visit) _____ the destination.

Our last staycation was an absolute disaster. We went to a travel agency to make a hotel reservation, and the agent suggested a beachside hotel that had picturesque views and emerald water. However, that was not the case. The pictures in the brochure were absolutely misleading, to say the least. We expected a neat and clean hotel with crystal clear pools and a sea overview. Imagine our shock when we realized that the hotel was far away from the beach and had an old and filthy swimming pool. On top of that, we found a couple of cockroaches and bugs in the room. When we asked for another room, we were given a room with a broken AC, which was fixed only on the last day of our stay.

Moreover, the restaurant was supposed to be five stars, but I can honestly guarantee that I have had better food in motorway service stations. The food was served cold with little to no diversity during our entire stay. The Italian cuisine that we were assured was nowhere to be found. Apart from that, we were charged for breakfast, while we asked and paid for an all-inclusive plan.

To make matters worse, the service was appalling and nothing like what was described in the brochure. The “professional custom service experts” turned out to be careless and even rude workers. The level of nonchalance and negligence in that hotel was definitely “unprecedented”. We were really looking forward to having the staycation of our dreams, but it was nothing but a nightmare.

Virgin Galactic (found) was founded in 2004 by several parties, including Sir Richard Branson, (own) owner of the Virgin empire, and Scaled Composites, an experimental aerospace company currently owned by Northrop Grumman. The Company (initial) initially planned its maiden space voyage for 2010 but have faced development and testing setbacks along the way, the most significant being the October 2014 crash of VSS Enterprise craft during a test (fly) flight. While there has been some tension between Branson's upbeat flight projections and the hurdles his team keeps facing, Virgin Galactic keeps (push) pushing forward with marketing its trips without an expected launch date on its website. The plan is to take passengers up to an altitude of 9 miles using a cargo aircraft which (then/ release) will then release the small spaceship that will use its rocket motor to reach into space, at an ultimate altitude of about 62 miles (the so-called Kármán Line). At the apex of the flight path, passengers have a few minutes to experience (weightless) weightlessness and gaze at the view. The ship will return to its original takeoff site following the journey. Space travelers are going to receive three days of training before the flight, and the whole package is priced at $250,000. It is said that more than 700 candidates (already/ reserve) have already reserved their seats on upcoming flights.
